What's New at the APA

- APA condemned racism and the negative mental health impact of gun violence in the wake of the tragic mass shooting that killed 8 people in Georgia. APA leadership offered condolences to the families of the victims and included resources for coping with trauma and disaster in the statement. You can read the full statement here, and more on our blog here
- APA released a statement praising the inclusion of mental health funding in the American Rescue Plan Act of 2021. Approximately $4 billion in funding for programs that support prevention and treatment of mental health and substance use disorders was included in the $1.9 trillion coronavirus relief package passed by Congress. You can read more about the funding and provisions included in the relief package here.
- APA marked International Women's Day by highlighting women psychiatrists whose work has exemplified service to disadvantaged groups, learn more here.

Key Dates and Observances

APA Communications staff maintains a calendar of key dates, observances and events at APA and in the world of mental health in general. The calendar is kept up to date a few months in advance. You can view the calendar and keep track of important mental health dates and observances here.

April Course of the Month – Pharmacological Approaches to Treatment-Resistant Depression

A significant proportion of patients who suffer from depression do not respond to standard antidepressant treatment. Unfortunately, it is unclear what, for a given patient, works best as a next step, pharmacological treatment. This course highlights the recent progress in identifying new therapies for depressed patients who have not responded to standard antidepressants, including atypical antipsychotics, as well as glutamatergic and GABAergic compounds.
